
The Power of You

Posted on: May 10, 2021

The key financial planning lesson that Covid-19 has taught us all, is that no matter how many planning scenarios a person considers, it is extremely difficult to get it perfectly right!

Covid has impacted Canadians' ability to hold, build and keep cash reserves. For many, it has affected their ability to work and earn a living, and for many small business owners, it has threatened their very survival. No matter how much planning small business owners did before the pandemic hit, very few set aside enough capital reserves for 12 months or more.

Retirees have seen travel plans go out the window. Their entire vision of "retirement lifestyle" has been dramatically altered. For example, many new grandparents have been unable to see or hold their recent blessings!

According to one saying, plans are useless, but planning is invaluable! The need for planning is greater now than at any time in the past 30 years! Your future well-being, lifestyle and mental health are more dependent than ever on your ability to make sense of the future.

Which brings us to your role in managing your financial life by navigating the current environment of economic uncertainty.

A key feature of modern life is how average citizens have so often delegated a lot of personal responsibility to third parties, such as Governments, doctors, grocers, etc. to take care of almost all their everyday needs. Because of the pandemic, Canadians have been learning a lot more about immune systems, nutrition, and the medical system in general.

The good news is that Internet technology has made accessing information easier than ever before. For example, Canada is part of the Paris Climate Change Agreement, and this may impact Canadian lifestyles and future tax rates. In cases like this, average Canadians can use a search engine to investigate for themselves about how climate change may impact their future.

So how does this empowerment relate to a long-term financial strategy?

While modern technology has certainly helped more people access a wide variety of financial resources via websites and smart phone apps, there is also a downside to this extensive information access, which has occasionally produced negative outcomes.

Information consumed, without a full understanding about context and historical significance, can sometimes lead to poor decisions in a variety of life situations. In order to follow a successful financial strategy for dealing with the unprecedented life disruptions that continue to affect communities across Canada, the best course of action might be to exercise patience and seek professional advice before making any large life-changing decisions.

If the on-going Covid pandemic has disrupted any of your significant financial strategies and you are not certain how to proceed forward, [call us today to discuss the power that you have \[1\]](#) to make changes that can positively affect your overall financial well-being.

Copyright © 2021 AdvisorNet Communications Inc., under license from W.F.I. All rights reserved. This article is provided for informational purposes only and is based on the perspectives and opinions of the owners and writers only. The information provided is not intended to provide specific financial advice. It is strongly recommended that the reader seek qualified professional advice before making any financial decisions based on anything discussed in this article. This article is not to be copied or republished in any format for any reason without the written permission of the AdvisorNet Communications. The publisher does not guarantee the accuracy of the information and is not liable in any way for any error or omission.

Tags: financial strategy [2]

Source URL: <https://garatfinancial.com/e-newsletter/2021/2021-05/article-3.htm>

Links

[1] <https://garatfinancial.com/contact-us> [2] <https://garatfinancial.com/taxonomy/term/50>